CAT FIGHTS AND WOUNDS

Cats are very territorial and as a result end up with fight wounds. Some common places for wounds to appear may be on the head, forelimbs or base of the tail, these can be painful and can often result in infection. Over 90% of infected wounds happen from cat fights.

Cats may become quite ill if they have an infected wound. Bite wounds on limbs may cause your cat to be non-weightbearing on the limb due to pain, other symptoms may include lethargy, high temperature and you may be able to feel heat and swelling around the wound

How much your cat fights may depend on the number of cats in the neighbourhood and the presence of entire tom cats. It is recommended that you confine your cat to your home during the night as this is when most cat fights occur and this will help limit wounds.
